The portfolio returned +5.03% on a gross basis (pre-fees and taxes) in January versus the benchmark return of +3.87%. This equates to a 6.61% increase in pre-tax NTA and a 5.08% increase in the post-tax NTA.

For the financial year to date, the portfolio delivered a return of -1.11% on a gross basis versus the benchmark's -3.23%. This was a meaningful outperformance of +2.12% in what has been a volatile environment for equity investors.

Market Review

The S&P/ASX 200 Total Return Index (including dividends) gained 3.87% during January delivering one of the strongest January's on record. However, the Australian market was not alone with global equity markets almost universally rallying on a more dovish US Federal Reserve (Fed), additional Chinese stimulus, a strong rebound in the price of oil and arguably oversold conditions following a shockingly volatile Q4 2018. The MSCI AC World (USD) finished up 7.1% with US equities driving the bulk of this upside.

Following the markets negative reaction to the Fed's 25 basis points hike in interest rates in December, Fed Chair Jerome Powell delivered a much more dovish message to the market in January. The Fed will now be patient in assessing the impact of the recent rate hikes and it would also be pragmatic with its effort to reduce its balance sheet. The market reacted positively, believing that the Fed will remain on hold in 1H CY19 and if economic conditions deteriorate, quantitative tightening could soon be finished as well.

Oil was the other major market driver with the price of WTI Crude up ~19% and Brent Crude up ~20% in US dollar terms. Despite rising concerns over a slower global growth, oil prices rose as traders reacted positively to a fall in US stockpiles after eight weeks of increases, OPEC members demonstrating compliance with output restrictions and new U.S. sanctions on Venezuela designed to transfer control of its oil wealth away from socialist dictator Nicolas Maduro in favour of the leader of Venezuela's National Assembly, Juan Guaido.

Energy (+11.5%) was the best performing sector on the back of the rise in oil prices with WOR (+21.5%) being the standout performer. Technology also outperformed due to the strong rally in the Nasdaq Index (+6.3%) with APT (+28.3%) performing well. Materials (+7.0%) rallied strongly on the announcement of further Chinese stimulus in response to economic weakness. FMG (+34.8%) was the major beneficiary given its leverage to the iron ore price and a closing of the pricing gap between high and low-grade iron ore. Financials (-0.3%) was the worst performing sector as weaker housing data and the pending release of the Hayne Royal Commission's final report kept investors pensive.

Portfolio Review

The portfolio's outperformance in January was pleasing given that the gains were reasonably well spread across our holdings. We benefitted from being overweight to both the technology and offshore orientated consumer discretionary sectors. Conversely, having limited exposure to the Materials, Energy and REITs sectors has been a drag on performance.

Price movements in January were primarily driven by macro factors such as the large rally in oil and iron ore prices, the sharp fall in the Australian dollar, the rally in offshore equities and concerns around the Hayne Royal Commission's final report.

Technology companies – APX (+24.4%), TNE (+13.2%) and NXT (+12.1%) - were amongst the best performers in the portfolio despite little company specific news. These companies rebounded strongly in conjunction with the Nasdaq index, following a weaker December for global technology companies.

A2M (+17.1%) performed strongly during January having been under a cloud during most of Q4 2018 as a result of potential licensing issues selling into China. However, clarity on the issue in December and the appointment of a Chief Commercial Officer and Chief Technical Officer in mid-January has given the market confidence that its high growth rate can be maintained and hence justifying its earnings multiple.

ALL (+12.8%), GEM (+12.0%) and SVW (+11.4%) also performed strongly with the latter benefitting from the stronger oil price. SVW fell 41% during Q4 last year due firstly to the decline in oil prices (affecting its holding of Beach Energy) and then concerns on declining global growth (affecting its holding of Caterpillar).

On the negative side, CGC (-25.5%) was one of only two detractors in the portfolio. Costa Group fell sharply after informing the market that earnings growth would be flat for FY19 after previously guiding to low double-digit growth. Slower than expected December/January trading conditions saw subdued demand in several categories including tomatoes, berries and avocados. The downgrade was unexpected following AGM comments in late November that the company was "off to a solid start to the year". While we still like the fundamentals of the company and its thematic tailwinds, the competitive environment among producers and its vulnerability to weather related events are cause for consideration.

Outlook

Markets have rallied back....but maybe too strongly

In last month's letter we wrote that markets had been oversold due to heightened concerns about global risk and that we believed these concerns were somewhat overdone and likely priced into markets. January's rebound validates that thinking, however the strength of the rally (MSCI AC World (USD) up 7.1% in one month) may mean that equity markets have moved too far the other way.

Domestically, the S&P/ASX 200 TR Index had rallied 7.3% off its December lows by the end of January. At the time of writing, it is up 11.4% off its December low. This move appears excessive given the domestic economic backdrop in addition to the fact that several significant macro risks persist. The recent rally has seen several sectors – namely property and mining – become relatively unattractive from a risk/reward perspective given that:

- The S&P/ASX 300 Mining Metals and Mining Index is at its highest level since early 2012 – despite Chinese economic growth is slowing.
- The S&P/ASX 200 A-REIT Index is trading just below its 2016 peak which is its highest level since mid-2008 – as property prices and approvals weaken.

In addition, although the major banks came out of the Royal Commission very lightly in our view, they still have major obstacles to overcome with: 1) property prices continuing to fall; 2) funding costs remaining elevated; 3) potential capital raisings; 4) increasing remediation and regulatory costs and; 5) the potential for negative gearing and franking credit changes post the upcoming election.

As such, we have prudently taken profits in a number of our portfolio companies. We have added to very few positions and are instead adding to our cash holdings until a more attractive purchasing environment presents itself. Our cash holding has increased from 8.3% at the end of December to 12.1% at the end of January despite the strong market rally.

Conclusion

We continue to think that Australian equities represent an attractive investment opportunity over the medium term, but in the near term the risk/reward potential of the market has deteriorated given the recent rally and the presence of ongoing macro risks, especially the upcoming federal election and further weakness in the housing market.

We think our portfolio companies can continue to outperform the market in the current environment, but the broad market rally may run out of momentum.
